The Second Constitution of Pakistan (1962)

Introduction:-

Pakistan has had three constitution in its history:

1- 1956 constitution
2- 1962 constitution
3- 1973 constitution

The second Constitution, also known as the 1962 Constitution, was enacted during the rule of President General Ayub Khan. This constitution is important because it introduced a new political system and changed Pakistan from a parliamentary democracy into a strong presidential system.

Date _____

→ Background:-

After General Ayub Khan took power through a military coup in 1958, he abolished the 1956 constitution. He then formed a Constitution Commission in 1960 to prepare a new constitution that matched his political ideas.

The 1962 Constitution was officially enforced on June 8, 1962.

Key Features of Constitution:-

A- Presidential System:-

Pakistan changed from a parliamentary system to a presidential system. The President had maximum power. The President could:

- Appoint ministers
- Dismiss the National Assembly.

B- Indirect Elections:-

The President was not elected directly by the people.
Instead, 80,000 Basic Democrats (local council members) voted for the President and National Assembly.
This system increased Ayub Khan's control.

C- Unicameral legislature:-

There was only one house of parliament called the National Assembly.
No Senate existed.

D- Islamic Provisions:-

Although Ayub Khan was more secular in approach, the constitution still kept many islamic features:

- Islam was declared the state religion.
- Advisory Islamic Research Council

Darsi Notes

Date _____

Introduced the first presidential system in Pakistan. Shifted power from parliament to the president. Gave Ayub Khan strong political control. Played a major role in shaping Pakistan's political history. Its failure showed that democracy cannot survive without public participation.

Conclusion:-

The 1962 Constitution of Pakistan is remembered as a major attempt to change the country's political structure. Although it centralized power in the Presidency and reduced democratic participation, it remains an important chapter in Pakistan's constitutional development.
