GUARDIANSHIP UNDER ISLAMIC LAW AND ITS FUNCTION IN THE CARE AND UPBRINGING OF A CHILD

1. Introduction

In Islamic Personal Law, guardianship is known as "Wilayat". It refers to the legal responsibility of a person to take care of a child and protect their interests. Islam gives great importance to the welfare, protection, and proper upbringing of children. A guardian is appointed to ensure that a child's religious, moral, physical, and financial needs are properly managed.

The concept of guardianship is mainly based on the idea that children are not fully capable of managing their own affairs, so a responsible adult must act on their behalf.

2. Meaning of Guardianship in Islamic Law

Guardianship means the legal authority and duty of a person to take care of a minor or a person who cannot manage their own affairs.

In Islamic law, guardianship is not only about legal authority but also about moral responsibility and protection of the child.

In simple words:
A guardian is a person who protects, supports, and raises a child in a proper Islamic way.

3. Sources of Guardianship in Islamic Law

The concept of guardianship is derived from:

- Holy Quran
- Hadith (Sayings of Prophet Muhammad ﷺ)
- Islamic Jurisprudence (Fiqh)

Islam emphasizes that children must be treated with care, justice, and kindness.

4. Types of Guardianship in Islamic Law

Islamic law divides guardianship into different categories:

1. Guardianship of Person (Wilayat al-Nafs)

This means responsibility for the care, upbringing, education, and marriage of the child.

- Ensures proper food, clothing, and shelter
- Provides education and moral training
- Looks after health and safety

2. Guardianship of Property (Wilayat al-Mal)

This refers to managing the property and financial matters of a minor.

- Protects the child's wealth
- Invests or uses property for the child's benefit
- Prevents misuse of assets

3. Legal Guardianship

This includes authority given by law to act for the child in legal matters such as court representation.

5. Types of Guardians in Islamic Law

There are different types of guardians depending on their role:

(i) Natural Guardian

Usually the father is the natural guardian. After him, guardianship may pass to the paternal grandfather.

(ii) Testamentary Guardian

A guardian appointed by the father in his will (Wasiyat).

(iii) Court-Appointed Guardian

If no natural guardian is available, the court appoints a guardian.

(iv) De Facto Guardian

A person who takes care of the child without legal appointment, but may not have full legal rights.

6. Rights and Duties of a Guardian

A guardian in Islamic law has several responsibilities:

Duties:

- Provide care, food, shelter, and education
- Protect the child from harm
- Ensure Islamic moral upbringing
- Manage property honestly
- Act in the best interest of the child

Rights:

- Authority to make decisions for the child
- Control over education and discipline
- Management of financial matters (if appointed)

Important rule:
A guardian must always act in the best interest (Maslaha) of the child.

7. Importance of Guardianship in Child Upbringing

Islam places strong emphasis on proper upbringing of children. Guardianship ensures:

- Moral and religious education
- Protection of rights
- Emotional care and support
- Social development
- Financial security

The Prophet Muhammad ﷺ said that every person is a shepherd and responsible for their flock, which includes children.

8. Custody vs Guardianship in Islamic Law

A very important distinction:

Custody (Hizanat)	Guardianship (Wilayat)
Physical care of child	Legal authority over child
Usually given to mother (young children)	Usually father or male relatives
Focus on daily care	Focus on legal and financial matters

Example:
A mother may have custody, but the father may still be the legal guardian.

9. Conditions for Becoming a Guardian

A guardian must be:

- Muslim (generally required in Islamic law)
- Adult and mentally sound
- Trustworthy and honest
- Capable of protecting the child's interests
- Not involved in harmful or immoral activities

10. Removal of a Guardian

A guardian can be removed if:

- He is dishonest or misuses property
- He neglects the child's care
- He is mentally unfit
- He acts against the child's welfare

The court ensures that the child's best interest is protected at all times.

11. Role of Guardianship in Modern Islamic Family Law

Even today, guardianship is very important in Islamic legal systems:

- It protects orphaned and minor children
- Ensures proper education and upbringing
- Prevents misuse of child property
- Maintains family structure and responsibility

In many Muslim countries, courts apply Islamic principles along with modern family laws to protect children.

12. Conclusion

Guardianship under Islamic law is a complete system that ensures the protection, care, and proper upbringing of children. It includes both legal and moral responsibilities. The guardian must always act in the best interest of the child and provide a safe, supportive, and Islamic environment for their development.

In simple words, guardianship in Islam is not just a legal duty but a trust (Amanah) that must be fulfilled with honesty and care.
